

Flora colossus

Marvel

Flora colossus

Very little is known about this species because only one of them has been seen. They are big, tree-like creatures that can change their shape a bit, usually by stretching their limbs. They can heal themselves and grow back if they are almost destroyed. They have tough, bark-like skin that protects them. Sometimes, they even have leaves growing from their body. They might not talk much, but people close to them can still understand them.

Alfa 177 canine

Star Trek

Alfa 177 canine

This animal looks like a small dog, but its long, shaggy fur hides most of its body. Later pictures showed that its body is also dog-like. It has some differences from a regular dog, like a single straight horn on its forehead and two antennas next to it. It also has a bony ridge along its spine that you can see through the fur. Its tail is a long, hairless cone with a tuft of fur at the end, looking a bit like a mix between a rat and a lion's tail.

Tamaranean

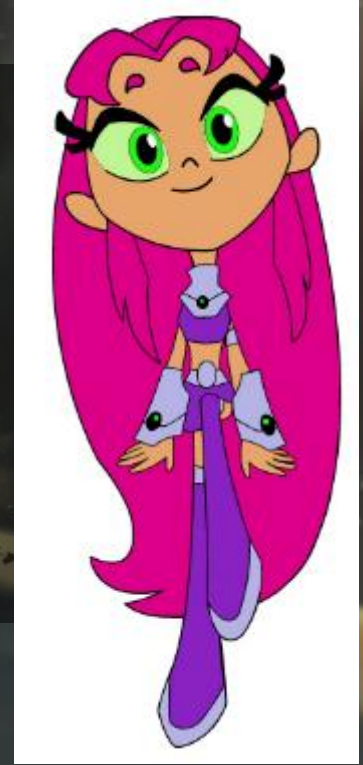

Teen Titans

Tamaranean

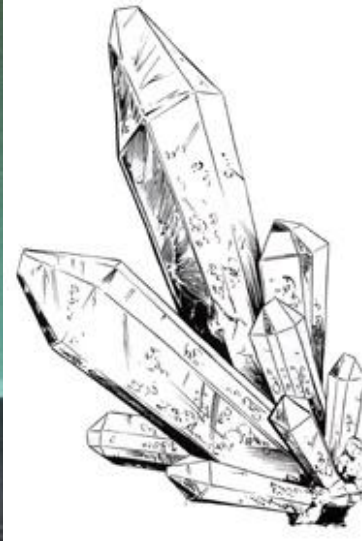

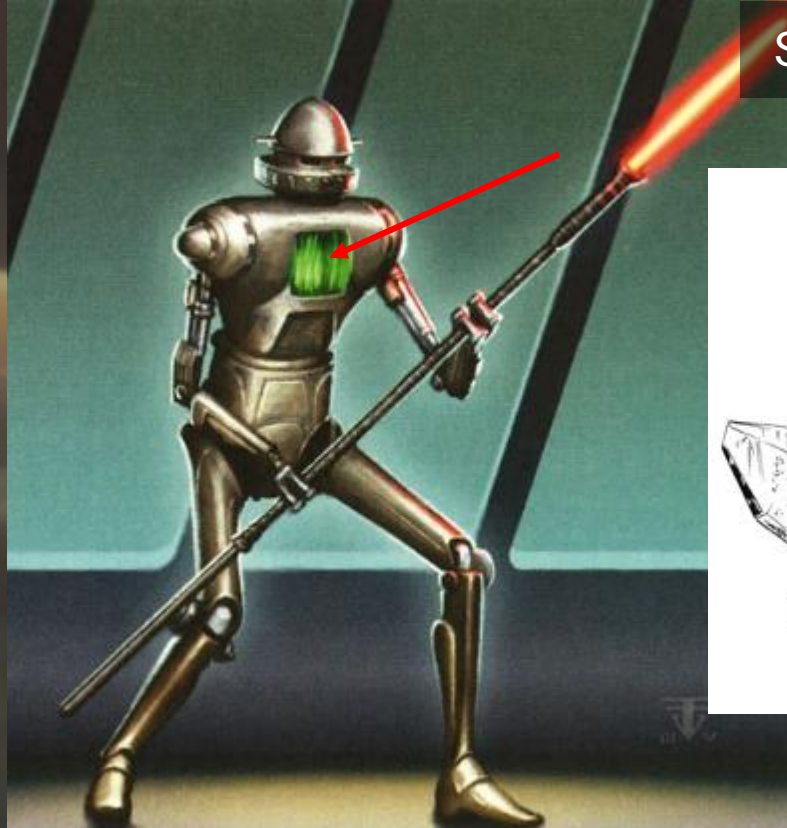

These aliens look like humans with golden skin, but they come from the Vega system, which is 25 light years away from Earth. Most of them have red hair (from auburn to bright pink) and green eyes, including the normally white part. They can fly by using ultraviolet light.

The most famous member of this species is Starfire. She can shoot energy blasts, but this isn't a natural ability. It happened because of experiments that overloaded her and her sister with ultraviolet radiation.

Shard

Star Wars

Shard

Shards are smart crystals made of silicon that can talk using light and electricity. They come from a planet called Orax, where they grow in big groups in hot springs.

When humans arrived, they noticed the crystals were talking and made devices to understand them. Later, humans built robot bodies for the Shards. The Shards in these robots loved the freedom and excitement of moving around because their colonies usually took a very long time to make decisions.

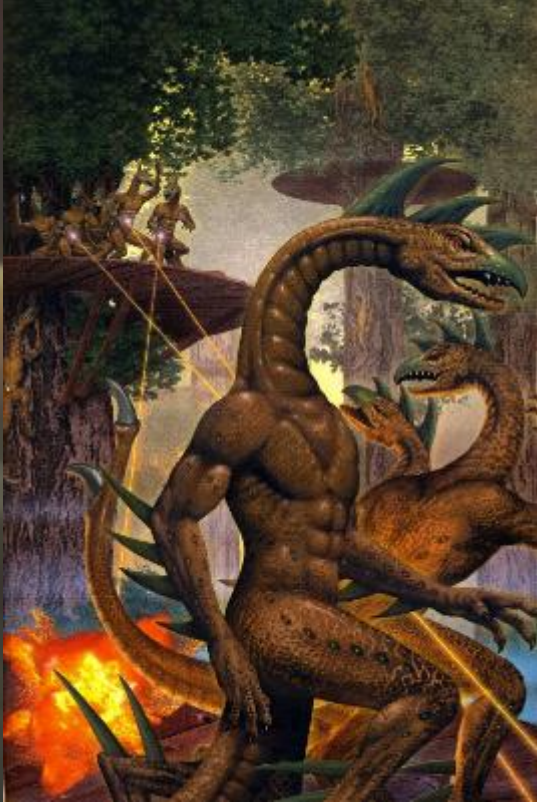

Some Shards could also use the Force. They created their own group of Jedi called the Iron Knights, but they were kicked out because they weren't organic.

Hork-Bajir

Animorphs

Hork-Bajir

The Hork-Bajir are 8-foot-tall reptile-like creatures who lived on a planet with huge canyons and very tall trees. They have sharp beaks and lots of blades on their bodies, but they are peaceful and eat mostly bark.

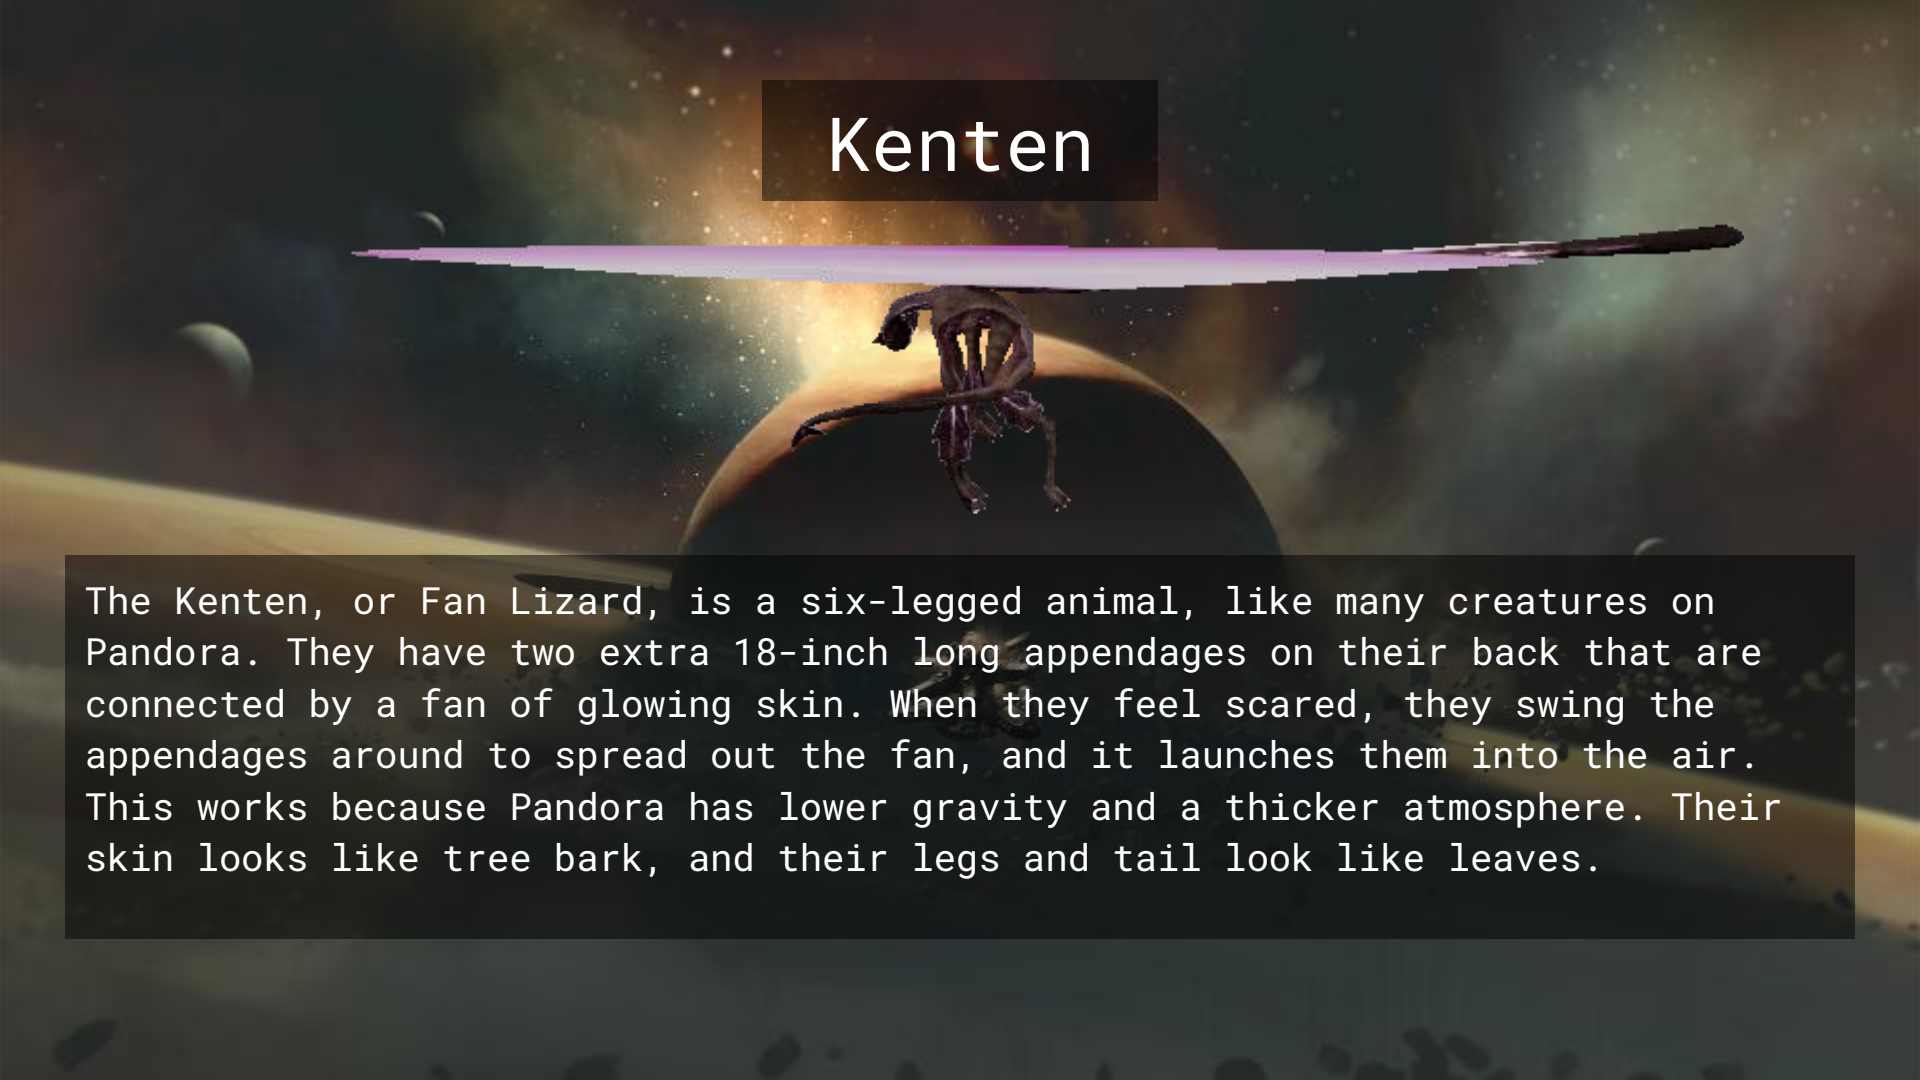

These gentle giants were wiped out in a war they didn't understand. They have a rich tradition of storytelling and are good at carpentry, even though they don't use many tools. They used hollowed-out trees called Speaking Trees to talk to each other over long distances instead of walking.

Kenten

Avatar

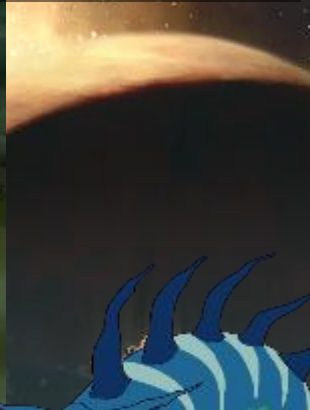

Kenten

A Kenten, a six-legged animal with a fan of glowing skin on its back, is shown in a dynamic pose, possibly leaping or running. The background is a dramatic space scene featuring a large, orange-hued planet (Pandora) and a bright, glowing ring or nebula. The overall atmosphere is mysterious and otherworldly.

The Kenten, or Fan Lizard, is a six-legged animal, like many creatures on Pandora. They have two extra 18-inch long appendages on their back that are connected by a fan of glowing skin. When they feel scared, they swing the appendages around to spread out the fan, and it launches them into the air. This works because Pandora has lower gravity and a thicker atmosphere. Their skin looks like tree bark, and their legs and tail look like leaves.

Bone Vampire

Futurama

Bone Vampire

This big creature eats bones by sucking them out of its prey. It has acidic spit to help it eat and protect itself. Its home planet, Doohan 6, is wet and foggy with lots of forests. People almost hunted them to extinction because they thought the creatures were a threat to farm animals. Later, they were brought back to the planet. At first, people didn't want them back, but then they found out the creatures are good for the environment and helpful for removing bones from meat so that it's easier to eat.

Rot Lop Fan's species

Green Lantern

CASE FILE #364:

ROT LOP FAN

Rot Lop Fan's species

This silicon-based creature is about 5 feet tall and weighs 230 pounds. They live in a dark area of space called the Obsidian Deep, so they can't see. They have two circles on their face where eyes would normally be, but no one knows what these circles or the strange organs on their back do. They have a big mouth with flat teeth.

The only known member of this species is Green Lantern Rot Lop Fan. Since he can't understand the ideas of "Green" and "Lantern," he is called an F-Sharp Bell instead.

Deoxys

Pokemon

Normal

Attack

Speed

Defense

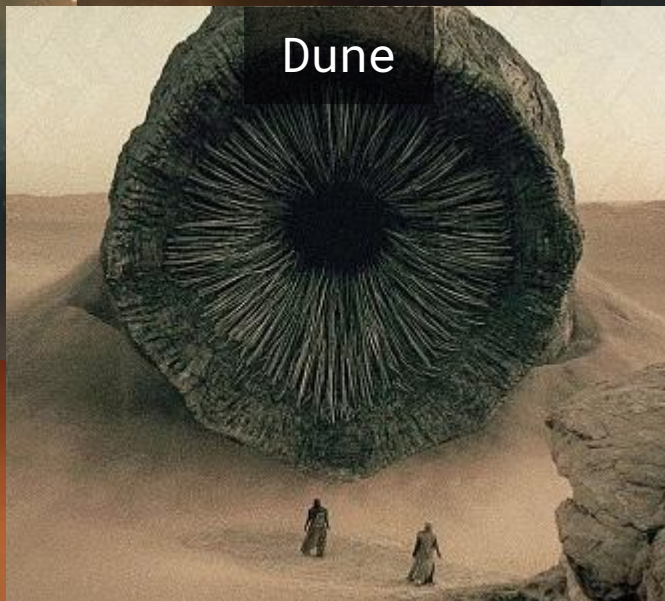

Deoxys

Deoxys was a space virus on a meteorite, but when it crashed on Earth, its DNA changed. Its brain is in the purple crystal on its chest, which can shoot laser beams. Deoxys can change its shape and abilities to deal with different challenges. It has four main forms: normal, attack, defense, and speed. It can also make small changes, like switching its arms from tentacles to human-like arms.

Shai-Hulud

Dune

Shai-Hulud

This giant creature can grow up to 1300 feet long (almost a quarter mile!) and 400 feet wide. They start as tiny animals called sand plankton that eat a substance called spice. Then, they become leathery, flatworm-like creatures called sandtrouts that love water. When sandtrouts poop, it turns into spice! Some sandtrouts go into a 6-year hibernation and come out as 10-foot-long sandworms. These sandworms keep growing by eating other sandworms and sand plankton. At this stage, too much water is very dangerous for them (even the small amount inside a person).

Qxotrokir Quadruped

Scooby-Doo

Qxotrokir Quadruped

This alien usually walks on four legs but can also walk on two. Its back legs are like a dog's, standing on two toes, and its arms have three-fingered hands. It's very strong and can bend steel bars and wrestle bulldozers. It has a beak and is mostly greenish-gray with dark blue on its back and light blue on its belly. It mostly makes squawks and screeches to communicate, but it can also speak English. It might share its planet with another smart species that looks like a see-through human.

Plorgonarian

Lilo & Stitch

Plorgonarian

This lanky species is roughly 5ft tall and walks on three short legs. They have two arms with three fingered hands. They have one eye, two tongues, and an antenna on their head called a Plorgonarian quart flanch (a multi sensory organ that allows them to receive radio waves and smell). The quart flanch also turns orange with age, like how hair turns white. Their home planet, Plorgonar, orbits what appears to be a gas giant and looks like the species' heads. It also has pink cloud cover and tentacle-like trees.

Upchuck

Ben 10

Upchuck

Upchuck is a small, green alien with a big mouth and four strong, bendy tongues it can use to pick up and grab things. It can eat almost anything, even stuff that other creatures can't. Upchuck turns what it eats into powerful energy blasts. This makes Upchuck very useful and strong, especially when other aliens might have trouble. Upchuck's small size and surprising strength make it a tough opponent.

Worms/Annelids

Men In Black

Worms/Annelids

These short, two-legged aliens have long torsos and legs compared to their main set of arms. Besides their main arms, they have two sets of smaller arms on their torso. Their skin is sandy and mottled. They have small heads with black eyes, a big mouth, and two large antennae. They can survive being cut in half and can easily reattach their two halves.

Gallaxhar's species

Monsters Vs. Aliens

Gallaxhar's species

This species is about 8 feet tall and looks mostly human above the waist. Instead of legs, they have six tentacles with clawed feet at the ends. Their bodies seem soft and might not have bones inside. They have four eyes: the two in the middle work together, while the ones on the outside work more independently. They drink through their ear, which is connected to their mouth. They hear using "ear nubs," but it's not clear where these are on their bodies.